Bulldog Days goes online:
Undergraduate Admissions Office

turns three-day program into 30 days of virtual experiences

Yale News (April 3, 2020)

When Associate Director of Admissions Hannah Mendlowitz '12 got the news that the response to the COVID-19 outbreak meant that Yale would not be able to host Bulldog Days, the three-day on-campus program for admitted students held each April, her first concern was scale: "Bulldog Days typically packs more than 200 events into a 48-hour period," she explained. "We needed to find a way to virtually recreate as many events as possible for our admitted students who live all around the world."

COVID-19 Update – Books as refuge: What Yale professors are reading during the pandemic (Yale News, April 7, 2020)

Whether they're holed up at home or working on the frontlines, people crave diversions from the unfolding crisis. Many turn to streaming services to catch a superhero blockbuster or follow the travails of the shameless miscreants of "Tiger King," the popular Netflix docu-series about big-cat breeding. Others prefer to switch off their screens and dive into a good book.
