WiP+ Mentorship Pieces
On December 4th, WiP+ hosted a lunch for women in physics and allies in order to celebrate mentors and the impact they have on mentee's lives and careers. As a part of this celebration of mentorship, various female faculty contributed some short pieces on mentorship. These pieces are published on the Yale WiP+ website (see below) and are also published on the Yale WiP+ Twitter (@yale_wip). The purpose of these pieces is to create a permanent positive archive of mentorship. If you are interested in finding more about WiP+ activities, subscribe to the allies email list here.
Meg Urry (Israel Munson Professor of Physics) on Yale’s participation in SDSS

Robert K. Adair: Explorer of Strange Particles—and Baseballs

Robert Kemp Adair, the Sterling professor Emeritus of physics at Yale University, passed away on September 28, 2020 in Hamden, Connecticut at age 96. He was a distinguished, world renowned pioneer in particle physics; but possibly even more remarkable as a warm, all-round human being; a beloved and highly respected teacher, mentor, colleague and supervisor. He had a delightful sense of humor, with a constant laugh that could be heard far down the hall. But if you were ever in need of serious advice, he was the person to seek out. He was a strong supporter of women in science; training a number of women Ph.D. students and proud of his wife Eleanor Adair’s career as an environmental physiologist and Fellow of the John B. Pierce Foundation, and later a senior scientist with the Air Force.
